Lesson Aim

Main aim: By the end of this two-part cycle, learners will have prepared (Day 1) and delivered (Day 2) a one-minute recorded PET-style monolog about something that causes them stress, using two reasons and a specific example with who-what-where-when-why details.

Subsidiary aim: Learners will also have analysed a model monolog about happiness using the same three-part structure.

Lesson Stages

Time	Goal	Procedure	Int
STAGE 1: Lead-in
5 min	To activate learners' interest in the topic of stress and happiness	• Display slide with two columns: "Stress" and "Happiness" • Show images of common stressors (exams, public speaking, homework) and happiness triggers (sports, friends, music) • Ask: "Which side do you relate to more right now? Tell your partner." • Pairs discuss for 2 minutes • Whole-class feedback: elicit 2-3 responses for each column • Transition: "Today we're going to listen to someone talk about what makes him happy – then YOU will talk about what stresses you out."	T-Ss
STAGE 2: Useful Language

Time	Goal	Procedure	Int
5 min	To present and practise key phrases for the monolog structure	• Display phrases on the slide: • Model pronunciation and drill chorally • Demonstrate that the same phrases work for BOTH stress and happiness • Elicit one example sentence for each emotion using the phrase	T-Ss
STAGE 3: Structure Input – The 3-Part Framework
5 min	To present the three-part monolog framework	• Display the three parts on the slide: • Explain: “This framework works for ANY topic – happy or stressful. The structure is the same.” • Check understanding: “What goes in Part 1? What goes in Part 2? What goes in Part 3?”	T-Ss
STAGE 4: Model Listening – Jack’s Happiness Monolog
6 min	To expose learners to a model monolog about happiness using the three-part structure	• Pre-listening: “You’re going to hear Jack, a 15-year-old boy from Sydney, Australia. He’s going to talk about something that makes him happy. Listen for the three parts.” • Play Jack’s happiness monolog audio • Pair check: “What is Jack’s happy thing? What two reasons does he give? What is his example?” • Whole-class feedback using the breakdown slide	T-Ss
STAGE 5: Structure Analysis – Jack’s Breakdown
5 min	To identify the three parts and WH details in Jack’s model monolog	• Display the breakdown slide: • Students tick off each part they heard • Elicit: “Why does Jack include who, what, where, when, and why? What does that do for the listener?” (Answer: makes the story real and interesting) • Transition: “Now you’re going to use THIS SAME structure – but for stress.”	T-Ss
STAGE 6: Preparation – Write Your Stress Outline
10 min	To give learners time to prepare their own stress monolog outline using the framework	• Display the outline template on the slide: • Model with a quick teacher example: “I’m going to talk about traffic. Reason 1: it makes me late. Reason 2: hot and noisy. Example: yesterday, on Rama 4 road, I sat for 45 minutes...” • Students write their outline independently – bullet points only, no full sentences • Teacher circulates and helps with vocabulary and ideas • Early finishers practise saying their monolog quietly to themselves	S
STAGE 7: Rehearsal – Paired Practice (Day 1)
7 min	To give learners low-stakes rehearsal before the recorded assessment	• Students work in pairs: Speaker + Listener • Speaker delivers their 1-minute monolog from outline (not reading full sentences)	Ss-Ss

Time	Goal	Procedure	Int
		• Listener ticks off on a checklist: “Did they name the stressor? Did they give 2 reasons? Did they give a specific example (who, what, where, when, why)?” • Swap roles • Teacher monitors, takes notes, and encourages students to keep their outline for Day 2 • Announce: “Tomorrow you will do this one-on-one with me. I will record it. Bring your outline.”
STAGE 8: Wrap-up (Day 1)
3 min	To highlight good language use and prepare students for the recorded session	• Praise 2-3 examples of good language use heard during monitoring • Write 1-2 common errors on the board and elicit corrections • Remind: “Tomorrow you speak only to me, one minute, and I record it. Use the same structure: name it, two reasons, a specific story.” • Ask: “What structure did we use today? Can you use it for other topics?” (Answer: yes – name it, two reasons, specific example)	T-Ss
STAGE 9: One-on-One Recorded PET Monolog (Day 2)
min	To assess each learner’s ability to deliver a one-minute structured monolog about stress	• Teacher calls students one by one to a quiet corner or separate desk • Each student sits facing the teacher (no outline reading – outline is for reference only) • Teacher starts recording (phone / tablet) • Prompt: “Tell me about something that causes you stress. Remember the structure: name it, two reasons, and a specific example.” • Student speaks for up to 1 minute • Teacher does NOT interrupt or correct during the recording • After recording: teacher gives brief verbal feedback (one strength, one thing to improve for next time) • Assessment criteria (checklist):
